I entered a fairly shady website and it redirected me to like 5 websites that are even more shady. How likely is it that I got a virus from these websites? I've usually heard here that Android devices are much more secure than your average Windows computer, as long as the phone isn't rooted. Is Android being Linux-based in nature also a reason as to why? What are it's strengths compared to computers? Is it as secure as people truly say it is?Extra info: I'm usually on the fence with Android security and because of this I cautiously use my phone when going on the internet because every comment section I see feels like a landmine I have to tread through carefully. If anyone can help ease my (and possibly other's) paranoia with a complex explanation you're welcome to do so. Simple request. I'm looking for a good free antivirus for Android. Please don't say "You don't need an antivirus for mobile". I want one, and I'm looking for one, so please don't suggest me to not use one. I frequently install APKs that do not come from the Google Play Store, which means that I need an antivirus to protect myself from any potential threats posed by files downloaded from sources other than the Play Store.I've already tried the following, and they do not fit my needs, so please do not suggest them to me.Lookout Antivirus (meh, I can't see individual apps to see if they're safe/actually scanned or not, which is a serious turnoff),Malwarebytes (Doesn't seem to actually scan? Ran it for 30 minutes and only got through like 5 apps),Avast (Ad nightmare, nothing more to say).Thanks in advance for helping me find an antivirus for my phone!
